Johnson stopped Gordon, forced a discussion on him, and ended by shaking his fist in the prisoner's face, accompanied by the vilest epitheta. Gordon gave no provocation whatever. This is characteristic of Andrew Johnson. It was in the early days of October, 1868. it was after the battle of Chickamauga It was on the Missionary Ridge. A flag of truce had come out from Chattanoora. It brought news that the family of a gentleman, then in the far South, was suffering for the necessaries of life. Frank Cheatham went into his tent, quietly took off his coat, then his breeches, and then his outer drawers; got out a pen-knife, slipped open a pocket in his woolen under-drawers and produced a twenty-dollar gold-piece, all he had. He said nothing about it, but the money reached the destitute family in Chattanoogs that evening. That counts
